Archaeological Museum of Patras

The New Archaeological Museum of Patras is a museum located in the city of Patras, Greece. It houses collections about the history of Patras and the surrounding area from prehistory to the end of Roman times. The museum has four thematic sections, three of which are permanent and one is periodic. The periodic section will be hosting various exhibitions around the year. According to the archaeologists of the 6th Antiquity Conservancy, the 70% of the items exhibited are seeing the light of day for the first time in the past thirty years.

Roman Odeon (Conservatory) of Patras

The Roman Conservatory of Patras is a magnificent building from Roman times that has today been reconstructed and is used for musical events. It is located to the west of the Castle, in the Upper town next to the Roman stadium and between the streets of Old Patras Germanou, Sotiriadou, Pantokratoros and Agios Georgios Square. It faces south and is covered with bricks, today its stairs are covered with marble.

S for Sights

Patras Lighthouse (Faros)

The modern Lighthouse of Patras dominates the pier of Ichthyoskala, in the area opposite Agios Andreas and the Tsivdi district. In the area there was the ancient port of the city which flourished in Roman times, while at the time the fish ladder was the supplier of the local market.

Apollon Theatre

The "Apollo" Municipal Theater was founded on 11/2/1871 on the north side of George I square and was put into operation on 10/10/1872. Its architect is Ernst Ziller, who designed three rows of gallery galleries with many decorative elements inside, while its Neo-Renaissance style facade is characterized by the portico with five arched openings that is repeated on the floor.

Pier of Agios Nikolaos Street

The Pier of Agios Nikolaos Street is one of the most recognizable and popular sights of Patras. The conditions and commercial needs of the past times made it remarkable in the first years of the liberation, after the revolution of 1821, when the first large commercial activities with the allied countries began to appear, mainly England and France.
